PilgrimCon Edition!

This week, we’ve had two distinct groups on site: our very own PilgrimCon and a private family camp renting out the site. PilgrimCon has been engaging in all manners of geekiness, and rotating through activities in their age groups, family groups, and as a large group. We plan to head off site for some adventures tomorrow, and a local astronomy club will be showing us the stars on Friday night.

Camp Updates

Geek Week

PilgrimCon is always like entering a new dimension. We have had campers in costume almost every day this week, made fandom crafts like lightsaber pens, and played a number of “con”-ified field games, from Sherlock to Hunger Game to Quidditch.

Challenge Course

For the first time, PilgrimCon campers got to know one another through activities at the Challenge Course. They shifted weight and found equilibrium like Indiana Jones, worked through a maze of lasers worthy of 007, and fit their entire crew into Millenium Falcon escape pods.

Justice League

PilgrimCon campers worked through several stations representing different members of the Justice League. They participated in some trivia, lifted a camper as Superman, battled Poison Ivy like Batman, competed in Tic Tac Toe as Flash, and moved water as Aquaman.

Change for Camp

Last year we raised over $750 for the Campital Campaign by filling our tree with change. This year we are again wanting to fill the tree with proceeds going to a new dock and rafts, a hammock village, and new challenge course activities.
